THE CHALLENGE

Boost review volume to amplify happy patient voices

Most of the Healthpointe's patients are loyal customers — a number of whom have been with Healthpointe for more than 10 years. But because many were over 50 years of age and not active on online critical sites like Google and Facebook, Healthpointe lacked the tools to keep a finger on the pulse of these patients to address ongoing feedback. Without this valuable feedback, the healthcare organization found they were at risk of "flying blind."

Additionally, a small percentage of unhappy patient reviews were ranking high on Google search, which did not reflect their general patient sentiment. Altogether, this impacted the overall brand perception negatively and hurt their ability to enroll new patients. As a result, Healthpointe's marketing spend on Google ads and social media was not converting to enrollments — prospective patients were influenced by the negative reviews.

"We look for innovative ways to connect directly with our patients and gather real-time feedback," said Ryan, nurse at Healthpointe

THE SOLUTION

Automated on-site review collection from every patient

With low ratings from reviews appearing high on Google search results, the objective was two-fold: first, bring the patient feedback in-house; and second, score higher search rank for the positive reviews on the Healthpointe website than the older negative reviews.

With BirdEye technology, Healthpointe setup checkout kiosks onsite, using existing office computers. After every visit, patients left quick feedback on BirdEye platform and rated their experience on a 1 to 5 star scale, without having to provide too much personal information.

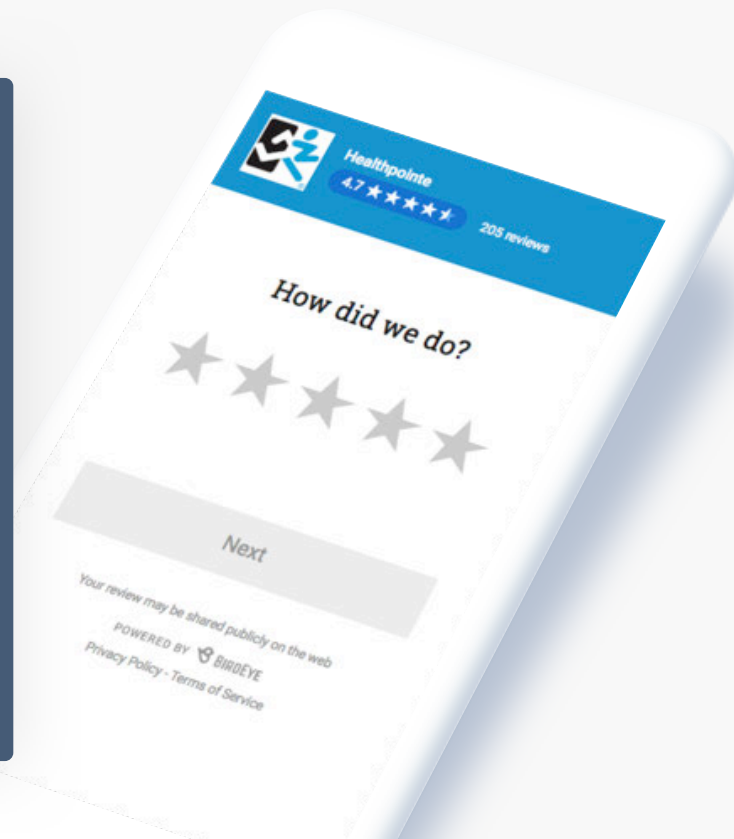

BirdEye also aggregated Healthpointe's reviews from all major review sites, and sent real-time alerts and reports to the management team to address issues in real-time.

"We will continue to use BirdEye to fulfill our mission to provide the most outstanding service and efficient healthcare for all our patients."

VP of Marketing,
